The people of Flagstaff are putting forth every effort to make things pleasant for Phoenix visitors. In fact, more pains are taken to accommodate Phoenixians than any other people. Dr. Duffield, who has lately returned from his first trip to Flagstaff and the Grand Canyon, is filled with admiration for the climate and wonderful scenery and with thankfulness to the folks of Flagstaff and J. W. Thumber, the owner of the stage line and hotel near the rim of the canyon. He was a member of a party consisting of Mayor Adams, Aaron Goldberg, Captain Brainers, U. S. A., and Professor Morris of the Yale law school. The ride in the bracing air over a solid road, through lofty pines from Flagstaff to the canyon, is itself something to be remembered with pleasure. The hotel is a pleasant home, wanting nothing conducive to personal comfort and then the canyon, but that is a point at which description grows inadequate. Dr. Duffield believes that Captain John Hance is hardly less remarkable than the canyon itself. Captain Hance has for years told visitors that the canyon at that point is eighteen miles wide and that statement has been accepted as a geographical fact. He told the doctor so, but the statement was not convincing, for the doctor could easily distinguish trunks of trees on the other side. He called Captain Hance out and talked to him confidentially. He begged him for once to descend to accuracy. The captain said with hesitation and in a low, trembling voice that the width was probably six miles. This is a fact never until now made public.—Arizona Republican.
